COHAT

Complete Oral Health Assessment and Treatment

Dental disease is one of the most common health complaints of pets. Up to 15% of pets of any age will have dental disease; this increases up to 80% in pets over 9 years old!

When your vet or vet nurse recommends dental treatment, this will be in the form of a COHAT.

A COHAT must be performed under a full general anaesthetic. As standard we include a preoperative blood test and IV drip during the procedure. Your pet will have a full series of oral x-rays, a complete oral exam, dental charting, and a full mouth clean to remove any tartar build-up. Based on the results of this the vet can then formulate a plan for any necessary treatment, which may include extractions.

If no further treatment is required, this will be classed as a Stage 1A COHAT. If there is some simple treatment required, this will be done at the same time and will be classed as a Stage 1B.

More extensive treatment will require a second, staged procedure on another day. We recommend splitting severe dental work into 2 sessions to minimise anaesthetic risks for your pet, and to promote better healing and recovery.

We recommend a gap of 2-6 weeks between stages.
